

Baking club got many people together and more teamwork and socialization was happening.

Our activities included everyone because when people don't have friends, they could just join activities because in ours, we include everyone.

Yes because during baking club, I noticed some kids in my group were shyer than the others. But being a leader mean't each person is treated fairly and so all had a turn.

The activities the leadership team would hold would always include as much as people as possible, for example baking/cooking club.

I feel comfortable sharing my ideas and experiences

I think it did because during baking we gave each person a chance to pour in the ingredients, mix, and pour the batter which they seemed to really enjoy

Some people in musical theatre didn't have anyone to hangout with but now they do by talking with their fellow members
